

Why not be at ease?

This year, one in eight women will be diagnosed with breast cancer. The good news: many will have positive outcomes, because they caught it early. That's why some women at high risk for breast cancer are choosing to have a Breast MRI in addition to their yearly mammogram. The American Cancer Society recommends it.

Breast MRI captures detailed, cross-sectional images of breast tissue in a comfortable procedure and uses no compression—you simply lie down. It's also a good option for women with implants.

Breast MRI, now at Bayshore Community Hospital... helping put women at ease.
